Legacy of the Lost Generation

Madrid to Paris

June 22 – 30, 2017

Edmund S. Morgan Professor of African American Studies and Dean of Yale College
Dear Yale Traveler,

“You are all a lost generation.”

This famous phrase of Gertrude Stein’s, used as an epigraph to The Sun Also Rises, refers to the writers and artists who came of age in the shadow of World War I. Please join me next June as we celebrate the legacy of Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Langston Hughes, and other Americans who lived, loved, and wrote their way through Europe in the Twenties and Thirties. Along the way, admire the works of the Cubists, Surrealists, and other artists who explored many of the same themes.

Begin with three days in Madrid, which Hemingway called “the capital of the world.” Visit the Prado Museum on a before-hours tour and explore Matadero, a contemporary arts center. See the city’s main bullfighting ring, the Plaza de Toros de las Ventas, the setting of several scenes in The Sun Also Rises, and dine at Sobrino de Botín, one of the world’s oldest restaurants. At the Reina Sofía Museum, marvel at Picasso’s Guernica, inspired by the Spanish Civil War, which both Hemingway and Hughes covered as journalists.

Travel to Nice for a two-night stay on the French Riviera. Bask in this “playground” with a “fairy blue” sea, where Fitzgerald spent scandalous summers with his wife, Zelda. Pay your respects to Marc Chagall at his gravesite in Saint-Paul-de-Vence, the medieval village where James Baldwin—who considered himself part of a “new lost generation”—lived out his days.

Two nights in Paris provide the perfect finale to our cultural pilgrimage. Stay at the Hôtel Pont Royal, whose bar was a favorite “Lost Generation” watering hole, and take a walking tour of Montparnasse. This then-bohemian neighborhood is where Lost Generation writers rubbed elbows with African-American jazz musicians and dancers—including Josephine Baker, whom Hemingway called “the most sensational woman anybody ever saw. Or ever will.” Meals at La Coupole, a favorite of Baker’s, and the Closerie des Lilas, where we hold our farewell dinner, will add to the pleasures of this program.

I hope you will join me for this exceptional journey.

With best wishes from Yale,

Jonathan Holloway
